Why Study Religion and a Modern Language?

The Joint Honors in Religion and a Modern Language provides the opportunity for full immersion into the language and culture that you study, while at the same time enabling you to explore the diversity of the world's religions and gain an understanding of their political and cultural impacts.

Whether you are studying French, German, Italian or Russian you will find exciting and interesting connections with your programme in Religion.

In an increasingly multi-cultural, multi-religious and pluralistic world, the advanced skills you will acquire will equip you for a wide variety of careers and give you much sought after competencies in intercultural understanding.

When you study Religion and a Modern Language at Trinity you will be able to study each subject separately and in-depth, and at the same time can explore the synergies between the two.

As part of your Joint Honors programme you will have the opportunity to study abroad for either a semester or a year, thereby achieving greater fluency and intercultural understanding.

Students in this programme gain uniquely transferable skills of problem solving, critical thinking, communication, and team work – skills that are highly sought after by future employers.
